George Buchanan as neo-Latin poet

ved prof. STEPHEN HARRISON (Oxford)

George Buchanan (1506-82) had a remarkable career: a distinguished classical teacher and scholar who spent much of 1520-60 in France, in his later years he returned to his native Scotland and was head of a college at his alma mater St Andrews, tutor to both Mary Queen of Scots and her son James VI, a leading figure in the new Church of Scotland and a key minister to James at the start of his reign.

This talk gives some introduction to the range of his neo-Latin poetry, feted all over Europe in his lifetime, and looks in some detail at his use of Horace in his Psalm Paraphrases and encomiastic odes, and of Vergil and others in his Silvae.
